Resolutions

WHEREAS—It has pleased our Heavenly Father in his wise providence to cause the grim messenger death to enter the sacred precinct of our beloved order and take from us our esteemed brother, Marshall A. Pike, thereby causing us and his dear family to mourn our loss.

Resolved—That while we humbly bow to the will of him who doeth all things well, we feel none the less conscious of having lost a dear brother and companion, and fully realize that a greater loss must have come to those of his more immediate friends.

Resolved—That not only our lodge which has lost a true member, but that the community has lost one who will be sadly missed and a place is made vacant in the home which no words of ours can describe, a void which cannot be filled.

Resolved—That we tender our sincere sympathy to the sorrowing family, realizing how empty sounding are any words of ours yet there is one who understands all things and who is ever ready to be a father to the fatherless, and the widow's God.

Resolved—That our lodge room be appropriately draped in mourning for the space of sixty days and a page of our journal devoted to his memory.

Resolved—That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of the lodge, a copy presented to the bereaved family and a copy sent to the New and Citizen for publication.

EDDY & MACUTCHAN, Stowe

CURIOUS BITS OF HISTORY

A QUEER LITTLE ENGLISH KING.

By A. W. MACY.

When Sir Robert Walpole awakened George Augustus, prince of Wales, out of a sound sleep to inform him that his father, George I., was dead, the prince exclaimed: "Dot is von gillie." Of all the monarchs who have sat upon the throne of England, George I. was perhaps the most ridiculous. He was a fat little Dutchman with a slender intellect and an overpowering sense of his own importance. Had he been a private individual he would have been looked upon with contempt. His morals were very loose—"a dull little man with low tastes," Thackeray calls him. But he had an excellent wife, who was far superior to him in every way. He did not know it, but in most things he yielded her absolute obedience. These lines were often quoted in those days: "You may strut, dapper George, but 'twill all be in vain; We know 'tis Queen Caroline, not you, that reigns."

He had little sympathy with the English people, and was always going back to Hanover. At one time he remained away from England two whole years, but was not greatly missed.

Solved.

Little Sam's father was asleep in the library and was giving evidence of it in stentorian fashion. After listening for a moment little Sam said inquiringly, "Choo-choo?" Not quite satisfied with his own explanation, he listened again. Then his face brightened. "Cow!" he said triumphantly.
